The Realty Reality of the Month: August 2010

To Read This Month: Do you hear strange little voices by the river?

News from Sylvia: Could you help me help you?

Don't forget: The REALTY-SUCCESS  Response of the month!

Do you hear strange little voices by the river?

When we go to Spa, in my case The Polar Bear Club where I belong, we are in principle very motivated to relax and unwind. So, why do some people throw themselves in the freezing, glacial-looking river? Hmm, your negative little voice speaks to you a bit loudly here? A bit, yes!

In my lectures and conferences where I share with my audience my passion for my favorite spa, I always get the "Oh! Lucky..." But when I confide that my pleasure is in leaving the sauna and throwing myself into the river even in the middle of winter, they all think I'm crazy! Yet, an unconditional believer for several years, I can only do without for a few days -- there must be a real pleasure for some people to try this and play this game?

We all believe that our motivation can be fed from a benefit, a well being, a self-pleasure, or that "feel good feeling" that we associate with an enjoyable experience. This helps to silence our little voice and give us the courage to plunge into new adventures!

But here, often, to convince yourself to dive, you must have that feeling from the start! But then, our little voice begins to sound very loud in our heads when our mind enters the distressing images of the cold, roaring river. We tend to see and hear the negative of these pictures before we see and feel all the benefits and positive feelings that this activity gives us when we do it the right way and with the right technique! Some regulars might say that we feel, in addition to a relaxing effect caused by the heat of the sauna, a small buzz, not unpleasant, caused by the rise in brain blood flow and adrenaline caused by the slight thermal shock due to the contact with the water. Is that why then, when they finally are out the water lying on their lounge chairs, we catch all the dreamy eyes and a beatific smile on their lips? Yes!

It's enough to silence our nasty little voice and find in it a surprising source of motivation to experiment with and to experience this ultimate pleasure. Some, like me, cannot live without it!

Imagine if you are able to soothe your little voice in this pleasant situation, how easy it will be for you to live other enriching experiences in this haven of peace and meet challenges in all areas of your life!

Here's to seeing you soon, by the now silent river! ☺

I hope you take the road to success and never forget that you are a good salesperson and be proud of it. You are honest and motivated. Do not let anyone believe otherwise, especially not yourself. I wish you REALTY-SUCCESS!

Much Love and Take care this summer my friend!
Cheers, Sylvia
